PERFECTIONISM

Perfectionism Is Not a Virtue.

Perfectionism isn't about standards. It's about fear. And the armor it gives you has a cost.

Perfectionism is anxiety wearing ambition.

It looks like drive from the outside. But from the inside, it's constant threat monitoring — never enough, never done, never safe to stop. That's not motivation. That's fear driving the car.

What it costs you.

Relationships suffer. Rest is impossible. Joy is conditional. You're always performing, never arriving. Perfectionism doesn't protect you from failure — it just makes failure feel catastrophic.

The antidote is not mediocrity.

It's self-compassion. Doing your best — and letting that be enough. Showing up imperfectly. Learning without needing to perform mastery. That's not lowering the bar. That's freedom.

Good enough is often more than enough.

Follow for content that names the hard things and points toward healing.