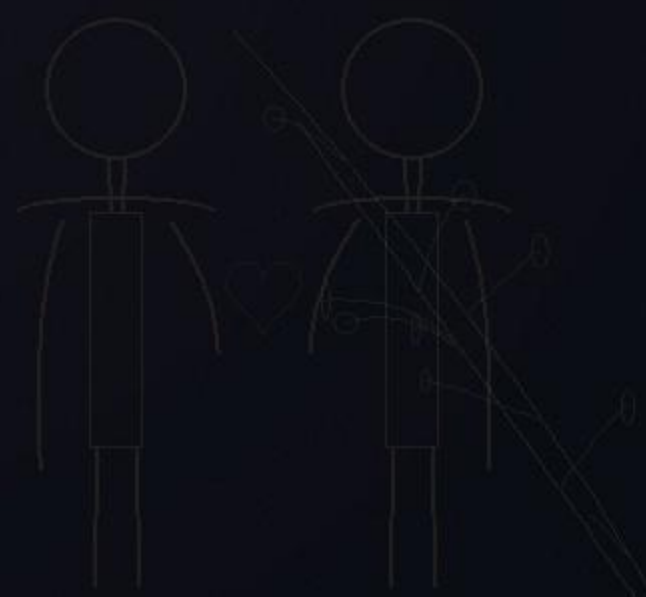
VULNERABILITY

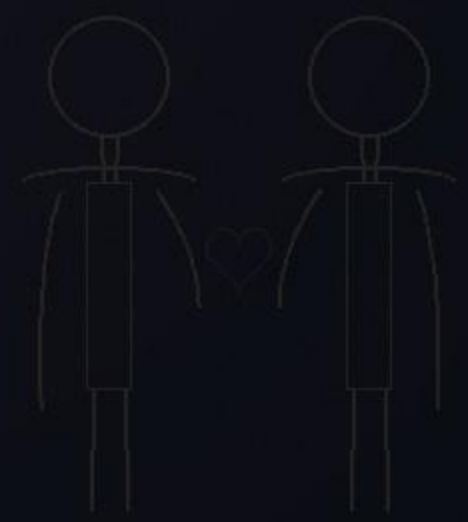
There Is Strength in Vulnerability.

2 Corinthians 12:9 — 'My power is made perfect in weakness.' God didn't avoid the broken places. He showed up there.



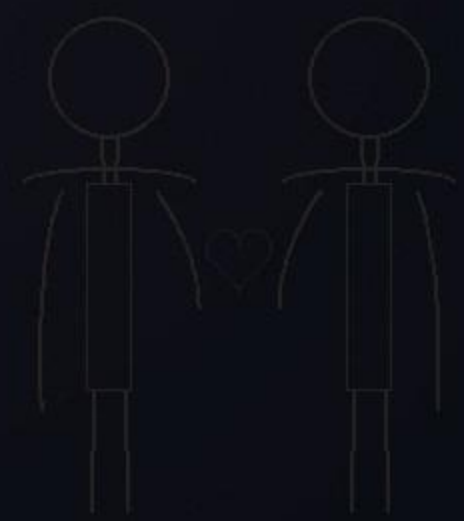
Performed strength is exhausting.

Many of us learned early that showing weakness wasn't safe. So we got good at holding it together — pushing feelings down, staying busy, never asking for help. And it cost us.



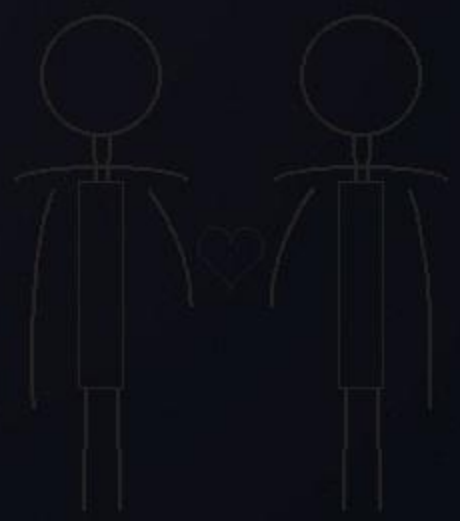
What vulnerability actually does.

In therapy, something shifts when a person finally says the thing they've never said out loud. The shame loses its grip. The wound begins to breathe. That's not weakness — that's courage.



Real strength is honest.

You don't have to have it together to show up. Real strength knows its limits, asks for help, and says 'I'm struggling' before the silence becomes unbearable.



Real strength looks like honesty.

Who in your life feels safe? Drop a ⍰ below.