BEHIND THE SESSIONS

How I Prepare to Hold Space

Before a client walks in, I've already been doing the work. Here's a peek behind the scenes.

Preparation is care.

I review notes. I pray. I set my intentions. I make sure the space feels calm before anyone arrives. How a therapist prepares is part of the clinical work — not separate from it.

I regulate before I help others regulate.

A scattered therapist creates a scattered session. My morning routine — prayer, journaling, coffee, quiet — isn't a luxury. It's how I show up fully present.

The space communicates something.

Soft light. No clutter. Comfortable seating. Silence held carefully. The physical environment tells a person something before a single word is spoken: you are safe here.

You deserve a space that feels like safety.

Follow for weekly behind-the-scenes + mental health content.