GRIEF

Grief Doesn't Have a Timeline.

You don't 'get over' grief. You learn to carry it differently. And there's no right way — or right time — to do that.

Grief is not linear.

The stages are real — but they're not a checklist. You can feel acceptance on Monday and denial on Thursday. You can laugh at a funeral and sob at a commercial a year later. All of it is grief. All of it is okay.

Grief can look like many things.

Not just death. Divorce. Diagnosis. Lost friendship. Failed dream. The end of a season you loved. These losses are real — even when the world doesn't give you permission to grieve them.

You don't have to rush the process.

Well-meaning people will often want you to 'move on.' But healing doesn't work on a schedule. What you need is space to feel it — and someone safe to feel it with.

Your grief is valid. All of it.

Follow for grief-informed, faith-based content every week.