Why I Named It 'The Good Place'

It wasn't named after a TV show. It was named after the conviction that every person deserves a space where healing is possible.

The name is a promise.

The Good Place Therapy exists because I believe the therapeutic space should feel like exactly that — a good place. Safe. Warm. Honest. A place where you don't have to perform or pretend.

Faith belongs here.

I'm a Christian therapist who believes your spiritual life and your mental health are inseparable. We bring all of you into the room — your history, your faith, your nervous system, your story.

This is what I'm building.

A practice rooted in presence, in integrity, in the deep belief that healing is possible for everyone who walks through the door. This work is my calling. And it's an honor to do it.

You deserve a good place to heal.
